Ad-Mad Show

In a world where attention spans are shrinking and competition is fiercer than ever, the power of a great advertisement has never been more vital. Enter the Ad Mad Show a vibrant, high-energy event where creativity, wit, and marketing genius collide. This isn't just a competition; it's a celebration of imagination, storytelling, and the art of persuasion.

This year, the Green House didn't just show up we lit up the stage and left a mark that won't be forgotten. Winning the Ad Mad Show was more than just a victory; it was a moment of pride, passion, and pure creative fire. With our incredible vice-captain leading the charge and our mentors backing us with unwavering support, we were absolutely unstoppable. Every idea, every performance, and every punchline we brought our A-game and then some.

We didn't just participate. We dominated.

From crafting hilarious, out-of-the-box ads to delivering them with confidence, flair, and a touch of drama, we owned the spotlight. Our team chemistry was electric, our thinking was razor-sharp, and our ideas were bold and unforgettable. Whether it was a quirky product pitch or a satirical twist on a classic brand, we made sure our ads weren't just seen they were remembered.

The Ad Mad Show wasn't just about selling a product. It was about selling a story, and we told ours with brilliance, humor, and heart. We learned that the best ads don't just inform they entertain, inspire, and connect.

This experience reminded us that when creativity meets teamwork, magic truly happens. And for the Green House, this victory wasn't just a trophy it was a testament to what we can achieve when we dream big, think differently, and believe in the power of our ideas.

Lunch at Desi Bliss

On a bright, sunny morning, we visited 'Desi Bliss', a delightful new restaurant launched by Jain Irrigation Systems Limited. Accompanied by our teacher, we were warmly welcomed with a delicious Kit-Kat shake that instantly lifted our spirits. This was followed by a mouthwatering spread of pasta, spring rolls, and noodles. The food was so good that many of us went back for second servings! After the meal, we shared our thoughts and suggestions on feedback slips provided by the restaurant. The visit not only satisfied our taste buds but also created joyful memories with our classmates and teacher. It was truly a refreshing and memorable experience that we'll cherish for a long time

- Kartik Modi, Class 5

It was just a regular day at school when suddenly our principal gave us some exciting news! He told us that our class was going to a brand new restaurant in Jalgaon called Desi Bliss. We were all super happy and couldn't wait!

When we got there, the restaurant looked simple but really welcoming. It wasn't fancy, but it felt nice and cozy. The best part was the food! It tasted

What started as an ordinary school day quickly turned into something unforgettable! Our principal surprised us with some thrilling news; our class was going on a special outing to a newly opened restaurant called Desi Bliss. The moment we heard it, the entire class lit up with excitement!

As we arrived, the restaurant greeted us with a warm and inviting vibe. It wasn't overly fancy, but it had a charm that made us feel instantly comfortable. The ambience was simple yet pleasant, and the staff welcomed us with friendly smiles.

But the real highlight? The food! Every dish was bursting with rich Indian flavors and had its own unique twist. From the first bite to the last, amazing, and each dish had a special twist of Indian flavors that made everything so yummy. I ate a lot, and my stomach was full really quickly, but I was so happy because it tasted so good.

I was really excited to go out of school for lunch with my friends. It felt like a mini adventure! I had so much fun and can't wait for our next trip!

- Manan Gujarathi, Class 6

everything was absolutely delicious. I ended up eating way more than I expected—my plate was full, and so was my stomach, but I couldn't stop smiling. It was that good.

What made the experience even better was sharing it with my friends. Stepping out of school and enjoying a meal together felt like a mini adventure. We laughed, chatted, and made memories that I'll always treasure.

This surprise lunch at Desi Bliss turned out to be one of the best school days ever. I'm already looking forward to our next outing!

- Aditi Kukreja, Class 7

What began as an ordinary school day quickly turned into something truly special. To our surprise and delight, our principal announced that our class would be heading out for lunch to newly opened restaurant Desi Bliss. The excitement in the room was instant and electric!

When we arrived, the restaurant welcomed us with a warm and cozy atmosphere. It wasn't extravagant, but it had a simple charm that made us feel right at home. The setting was relaxed, the staff was friendly, and the anticipation for the food was high.

And the food? Absolutely incredible. Each dish was packed with bold Indian flavors and a creative twist that made every bite memorable. From spicy starters to rich, flavorful mains, everything was

It started off like any other school day until our principal walked in with a surprise that instantly lit up the room. He announced that our class would be heading out for lunch to a brand-new restaurant called Desi Bliss. The moment he said it, the classroom buzzed with excitement. A break from routine, good food, and time with friends? We couldn't wait!

As we reached the restaurant, we were greeted by a cozy, welcoming vibe. It wasn't flashy or over-the-top, but it had a warm charm that made us feel instantly at ease. The soft lighting, the gentle hum of music, and the aroma of spices in the air set the perfect mood.

Then came the best part—the food. And wow, what a feast it was! The pasta was creamy and rich, with just the right balance of herbs and cheese. The paneer tikka was unbelievably soft, marinated to perfection, and grilled with a smoky finish that melted in the mouth. But the real showstopper? The Singaporean noodles—spicy, tangy, and packed with flavor. Every bite was a burst of taste, and we couldn't get enough.

We laughed, shared bites, and even argued playfully over who got the last piece of paneer. It felt like a mini adventure—stepping out of school, enjoying incredible food, and making memories with friends.

Our visit to Desi Bliss, a charming restaurant in Jalgaon, was a tasteful break from routine and a feast for the senses. As students of Anubhuti School, we enjoyed not only a variety of flavorful dishes but also the restaurant's warm ambiance and attention to detail. The fusion of traditional Indian cuisine with cooked to perfection. I found myself going back for seconds even after I was full just because it tasted so good.

What made the experience even more enjoyable was sharing it with my classmates. Stepping out of school and enjoying a delicious meal together felt like a mini adventure. We laughed, took photos, and created memories that will stay with us for a long time.

Our visit to Desi Bliss was more than just a lunch outing—it was a refreshing break, a bonding experience, and a reminder of how the simplest surprises can bring the greatest joy. I'm already counting down the days until our next trip!

- Diya Deshpande, Class 8

Our visit to Desi Bliss wasn't just a lunch outing—it was a celebration of friendship, flavor, and fun. It reminded us how even the simplest surprises can turn into the most unforgettable moments. Here's hoping for many more delicious adventures ahead!

- Namit Jain, Class 9

a modern twist made the meal unforgettable. The visit gave us time to bond, laugh, and appreciate the joy of good food shared with friends. It was more than a meal—it was a moment of togetherness we'll fondly remember.

Farewell

As a Grade 9 student, writing this farewell feels a little strange—like saying goodbye to a part of our school's soul. Our seniors have always been more than just students in higher grades. They've been role models, mentors, and sometimes even our biggest cheerleaders.

I remember walking into school for the first time, nervous and unsure. But it was the seniors who made the corridors feel less intimidating. They guided us, laughed with us, and occasionally warned us about the math tests we weren't ready for! In their own quiet way, they shaped our school experience and helped us find our own path.

Now, it's their time to step out into the wider world, and while we're proud, we're also going to miss them terribly. The cultural fests won't be the same without their energy, nor the classrooms without their calming presence. Their legacy isn't just in trophies and report cards, but in every encouraging smile and helping hand they extended to us.

So here's our promise: we'll carry forward the spirit you leave behind. We'll continue to build the kindness and courage you showed us. And we'll always remember that once upon a time, we looked up to a group of seniors who made our school better just by being in it.

To our seniors: thank you for everything. May your next chapter be even brighter than the one you're leaving behind. You will always have a special place in our memories and in the heart of our school.

- Saish Patil, Class 9

As we entered our class after the break, the entire 11th grade sprang into action, hearts racing and minds buzzing with excitement. We were on a mission—to give our beloved seniors a farewell that would not only send them off with a bang but etch a memory so unforgettable, it would stay with them for years. Every moment was meticulously planned, every detail thought out to perfection, because we knew this wasn't just any goodbye. It was a celebration of their journey, a bone-chilling, epic farewell that would leave everyone in awe.

Having seniors like them was a virtue we could have ever asked for. Rather than taking cat out of the bag, we kept all secrets lock in ourselves. Creating a suspense in the mind of our seniors.

Grand Dinner

On a divine evening, we gathered at Desi Bliss, a place that promised more than just a grand dinner—it offered a memorable blend of flavors and life lessons. We walked in, eagerly anticipating the night ahead, and were seated as we waited for Nisha Akka and Atul Bhau to join us. The moment they arrived, the conversation naturally flowed, beginning with tales from Atul Bhau's school days.

It didn't take long before the conversation shifted to the profound theme of consistency—how small, seemingly insignificant actions, repeated over time, can lead to extraordinary success. Atul Bhau, took it a step further, illustrating his point with a mathematical approach. He demonstrated how small, incremental improvements, much like tiny numbers in an equation, could lead to monumental outcomes over time. His mathematical analogy didn't just explain the concept—it made it feel tangible and actionable, a valuable lesson for all present.

As we absorbed these insights, a delicious Kit-Kat shake was served, its rich, velvety texture a perfect companion to the unfolding discussion. But the evening wasn't just about profound conversations. Nisha Akka, ever the thoughtful host, handed out papers, inviting us to jot down the pros and cons of our school experiences. This simple yet reflective exercise opened up a space for introspection and shared memories, further enhancing the sense of connection between us all.

The evening continued with a feast of mouth-watering dishes. From the crispy, golden Pasta to the spicy, smoky Paneer Tikka, every bite was a celebration of flavors. The Dosa was light yet flavorful, and the Pizza was a comforting touch to the spread. The grand finale, however, was a decadent, finger-licking brownie that left everyone craving more.

In the end, the evening was more than just a meal—it was an enriching experience, where wisdom and food came together to create lasting memories. As we savored the last bites, we realized that the real takeaway wasn't just the lessons we learned, but the cherished moments spent in good company.

Holi

The festival of Holi, known as the “festival of colors,” was celebrated in our boarding school with immense enthusiasm, vibrancy, and joy. The event brought together the entire school community—students, teachers, and staff—in a memorable day filled with cultural expression, laughter, and unity. The occasion served not only as a celebration of tradition but also as a reflection of the values of harmony, inclusivity, and togetherness that our institution upholds.

The day commenced with a specially organized morning assembly that set the tone for the celebration. The assembly began with a prayer, invoking blessings for peace and happiness. Following this, groups of students presented informative and engaging accounts of how Holi is celebrated across different states of India.

The audience was taken on a cultural journey through the country's diverse traditions: the spirited Lathmar Holi of Uttar Pradesh, where sticks and colors create a unique spectacle; the serene Phoolon ki Holi of Vrindavan, where fragrant flowers replace traditional colors; the bonfires of Holika Dahan, symbolizing the triumph of good over evil; and the vibrant processions of West Bengal, where dance and music enrich the festivities. Students also highlighted the culinary traditions associated with the festival, such as the preparation of sweets like gujiya and the refreshing drink thandai.

These presentations not only deepened everyone's understanding of India's cultural diversity but also underscored the universal themes that Holi embodies—unity, renewal, forgiveness, and joy. The Principal concluded the assembly with an inspiring message, encouraging students to uphold these values both within and beyond the school campus.

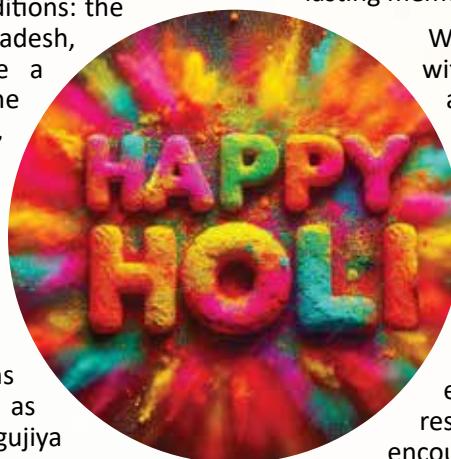

Following the assembly, the highlight of the day began—the application of colors. Classes were invited one after another to the stage, where teachers applied gulal on students' faces in a gesture of warmth and affection. This act represented equality and respect, breaking down barriers between individuals and symbolizing the bonds of care that exist in our school community.

The grounds soon came alive with laughter as students joyfully applied colors to their peers. The entire atmosphere was transformed into a vibrant mosaic of red, yellow, green, and blue. Laughter echoed across the campus, and the spirit of Holi—lighthearted, inclusive, and joyous—spread rapidly among all present.

The celebrations extended to the sports ground, which became the center of activity. Traditional and contemporary Holi songs played over the speakers, creating an energetic backdrop for the festivities. Students danced in groups, while others formed playful circles, smearing colors on each other with enthusiasm. Teachers joined in as well, further strengthening the sense of community.

In addition to dancing and playing with colors, some classes organized small games and interactive activities. These added variety and excitement to the event, ensuring that every student found a way to participate meaningfully. The cheerful environment, complemented by music and camaraderie, created lasting memories for everyone involved.

While the celebration was filled with joy and festivity, it also carried a deeper message. Holi, at its core, is about fostering harmony, mending broken bonds, and embracing forgiveness. The festival reminded students that life is enriched when shared with others in a spirit of kindness and understanding.

This year's celebration also emphasized environmental responsibility, as the school encouraged the use of safe, skin-friendly, and eco-friendly colors. Students were reminded to celebrate responsibly, ensuring that joy never comes at the expense of health or nature.

The Holi celebration of this year was not merely an event but a reaffirmation of the values that strengthen our school community. It brought students and teachers together in a shared spirit of joy, equality, and unity. The festival provided an opportunity for cultural learning, personal bonding, and collective happiness.

As the colors slowly faded from our faces by the end of the day, the warmth in our hearts endured. The memories created during this celebration will remain cherished for years to come, serving as a reminder of the power of tradition and the strength of community. The event was a true testament to the timeless magic of Holi and its ability to unite people in harmony and joy.

Class 9th Interaction with Bhau

As a Grade 9 student, I never imagined I'd get a chance to sit down with our school chairman, Mr. Atul Jain. But when the opportunity came to join a student discussion about our goals and challenges, especially with board exams on the horizon, I felt both nervous and excited.

Bhau welcomed us with the warmth of someone who truly cares. What stood out most was that he didn't lecture us; he asked us how we felt. We spoke honestly about the pressure we face when preparing for exams, the fear of not doing well, and the stress of studying for long hours. Instead of brushing it off, he listened carefully and shared that success isn't only about long hours, but about focused effort and inner balance.

He explained how understanding our own learning style can make a big difference, and encouraged us to study smarter not just harder. He even suggested taking short breaks for music, walks, or hobbies to recharge our minds, saying, "A rested mind remembers more than a tired one."

Bhau also reminded us that our goal shouldn't just be to top the class, but to enjoy learning and to grow as individuals. He motivated us to set personal objectives big or small and work steadily toward them. His belief in our potential made many of us feel more confident, not just about exams, but about the future.

Walking away from that meeting, I felt lighter, not because our workload had disappeared, but because someone important understood what we were going through and believed we could rise above it. That conversation reminded me that while board exams are important, they're not everything. What matters is how we grow, how we support each other, and how we continue learning, beyond the classroom and the calendar.

- Rutva Shah, Class 9

Class 11th Interaction with Bhau

As a Grade 11 student, I recently had the privilege of meeting Mr. Atul Jain, our school's chairman a conversation that left a lasting impression on me. Known for his calm wisdom and genuine care for students, Atul Bhau invited class 11 students to discuss our goals and the larger objectives that shape our educational journey.

The meeting was less of a formal address and more of an open, motivating dialogue. Atul Bhau began by asking us what success means to us not just in terms of marks, but in terms of growth, resilience, and purpose. It was a question that made many of us reflect more deeply than we expected.

We spoke openly about the pressures we face with upcoming board exams, and he listened patiently before reminding us that exams are stepping stones, not final destinations. He emphasized that while academic excellence is important, it should never come at the cost of curiosity, health, or character.

His words gave us a sense of calm and clarity, and a renewed perspective on how to approach our studies with balance.

He also encouraged us to set clear goals not just to score well, but to truly understand concepts and apply them to real life. "Let learning shape you, not stress," he said, a line that stuck with me long after the meeting.

More than anything, Atul Bhau's presence reminded us of the importance of leadership that listens. His belief in every student's potential filled the room, and we walked away feeling not just guided, but empowered.

That conversation wasn't just about exams. It was about who we want to become and it reminded us that we are not alone in our journey.

Visit to Jain Plastic Park

As a Grade 11 student with a budding interest in science and industry, our recent educational visit to Jain Plastic Park in Jalgaon was nothing short of eye-opening. It wasn't just a field trip it was a window into the dynamic world of modern manufacturing and sustainability.

From the moment we entered the factory premises, we were met with impressive scale and organization. The staff greeted us warmly and took us through the various sections of the plant. We learned about the entire lifecycle of plastic products from raw material selection to extrusion, molding, recycling, and quality control. The efficiency with which the machines operated and the precision of the process left many of us amazed.

One of the most fascinating parts of the tour was seeing how plastic pipes, a product we often take for granted, are made to exact specifications for agricultural and infrastructure use. The factory emphasized environmental responsibility, demonstrating how waste materials are reused or recycled wherever possible a concept that deeply resonated with us as students in a world facing environmental challenges.

We also had an engaging Q&A session with the engineers and plant supervisors, who explained how innovation and automation are transforming Indian manufacturing. They inspired us to think about careers in engineering, environmental science, and product design.

What made this visit special was how it connected textbook theory with real-world application. Concepts like thermoplastics, injection molding, and industrial safety, which seemed abstract before, became crystal clear as we saw them in action.

This experience left me not only more informed but also inspired. Jain Plastic Park showed us how industries can grow responsibly and reminded us of the importance of technology, teamwork, and sustainability in building our future.

Visit to Nilons

Visiting the Nilons manufacturing plant in Jalgaon was a truly flavorful experience both literally and educationally! Known for its diverse range of pickles, spices, sauces, and instant mixes, Nilons has been a household name in India for decades. Getting a behind-the-scenes look at how these products are made gave us an entirely new appreciation for the food industry.

Our visit began with a warm welcome from the plant's staff, followed by a guided tour through different departments. We observed various production lines from raw material handling and spice blending to cooking, bottling, and packaging. The precision and cleanliness maintained at every stage impressed us all. The aroma of freshly ground masalas was enough to awaken anyone's appetite!

One highlight of the visit was witnessing how traditional recipes are produced at scale without losing the authentic taste. The company's integration of automation with human skill showed us how modern food production balances innovation with heritage.

We also learned about strict quality checks and hygiene standards upheld during the process, giving us insight into the science of food safety. Our hosts explained how consistency in taste and shelf life is ensured lessons that connected directly to what we've learned in chemistry and biology classes.

What inspired us most was the story of Nilons' growth from a small home-run venture to a major national brand. It reminded us that successful businesses often start with a passion and a recipe!

The visit ended with a short interaction with company executives who shared insights into product development, marketing, and the importance of customer trust.

This journey left us all not just smarter, but hungrier for knowledge, innovation, and maybe a little extra pickle at lunch.

Science Day

This year's Science Day celebration at our school was nothing short of electrifying and our science students truly took that to heart. The assembly hall was transformed into mini innovation hubs, with every corner bursting with ideas, experiments, and student-made inventions.

In the weeks leading up to the event, students across grades brainstormed, built prototypes, and tested their models with an energy that was contagious. On the big day, the exhibits spoke volumes about imagination fueled by curiosity. There was a self-watering plant system made by students, a low-cost water purifier created using natural filters, and even a robotic arm built by a senior who programmed it to sort waste into dry and wet categories combining sustainability with technology.

What stood out most was not just the technical creativity, but the excitement in the room. Students explained their inventions to visitors and judges with confidence and clarity, often sharing how their projects could solve real-world problems.

It was science in its purest form asking questions, experimenting, failing, fixing, and finally finding solutions.

Teachers and parents were amazed at how deeply students had engaged with their projects. Some of the inventions sparked ideas for further research and even future careers. The school chairman, Mr. Atul Jain, visited each exhibit with genuine interest, encouraging students to think boldly and never stop questioning.

Science Day wasn't just about innovation it was about empowerment. It reminded us that science isn't confined to textbooks or exams. It's in the circuits we solder, the problems we solve, and the dreams we build from scratch.

Walking out of the exhibition, we didn't just feel proud we felt ready. Ready to invent, inspire, and imagine a better tomorrow.

Presentation on modes of raising capital: peer-to-peer (P2P) lending, crowdfunding

In an era where innovation drives financial inclusion and entrepreneurship, traditional funding methods are rapidly being complemented and in some cases, replaced by dynamic, tech-driven alternatives. This was the central theme of a recent paper presentation held at the Institute of Management and Research (IMR), Jalgaon, where students and scholars gathered to explore the evolving landscape of fundraising.

The presentation focused on three transformative modes of raising capital: peer-to-peer (P2P) lending, crowdfunding, and other emerging financial models that are reshaping how individuals and businesses access funds.

Peer-to-peer lending was discussed as a revolutionary platform that connects borrowers directly with individual lenders, bypassing traditional financial institutions. The paper highlighted how P2P lending offers lower interest rates for borrowers and higher returns for investors, while also addressing the risks and regulatory challenges involved.

Crowdfunding, another focal point, was explored in its various forms—reward-based, donation-based, equity-based, and debt-based. The presentation showcased successful case studies from India and abroad, emphasizing how crowdfunding empowers startups, artists, and social causes by leveraging the power of the crowd.

The discussion also touched upon alternative funding models such as angel investing, venture capital, and revenue-based financing. These were analyzed in terms of accessibility, scalability, and their role in supporting innovation and entrepreneurship in emerging markets.

The event at IMR Jalgaon was not just an academic exercise it was a platform for critical thinking, dialogue, and real-world application. It encouraged students to think beyond conventional finance and embrace the possibilities that technology and collaboration offer in the world of fundraising.

Art Mela

On the last day of the academic year, the school campus came alive with vibrant colors and creativity as it hosted its much-awaited Art Mela, a celebration of artistic expression and student talent. The event showcased the hard work and imagination of every single student, from the youngest to the oldest, transforming the school into a mini art gallery that left visitors in awe.

The Art Mela was a culmination of months of effort put in by students under the guidance of their dedicated teachers. From detailed portraits to expressive paintings, from delicate pottery crafted on the wheel to a series of intricate small framed artworks, the exhibition displayed an impressive variety of artistic mediums. Each piece reflected the individual creativity and growth of the students, making the event truly inclusive and inspiring.

One of the major highlights was the pottery section, where beautifully shaped and painted pots caught the attention of many. Parents were especially delighted to see the hidden talents of their children come to life through clay, color, and canvas. The walls were adorned with rows of framed paintings—some abstract, others realistic—all speaking volumes of the students' hard work and dedication.

The atmosphere was filled with pride and excitement as parents, teachers, and students walked through the colorful displays. Many parents expressed their admiration, noting how meaningful it was to end the year on such a creative and joyful note. Some even took photographs to capture the moment, while others spent time talking to students about the stories behind their creations.

The Art Mela not only served as a platform to showcase talent but also as a reminder of the importance of creativity in education. It was a perfect conclusion to the academic year—celebrating effort, imagination, and the joy of learning through art.

Ugadi

Celebrating Ugadi at school this year was a truly memorable experience filled with excitement, tradition, and unity. The preparations began at the crack of dawn—literally. A group of dedicated boys rose at 4 AM, energized and eager to transform our dining hall into a space worthy of the festival. With rangoli powders, mango leaves, and strings of marigolds in hand, they worked together to create a vibrant and festive atmosphere. From arranging flowers to hanging torans, every detail was given loving attention.

What made this celebration special was how seamlessly the spirit of teamwork unfolded. Instead of leaving the cooking to just a few, the boys eagerly joined hands with the girls in the kitchen. It was inspiring to see laughter shared over chopped vegetables and spices being blended with care. From preparing the traditional Ugadi pachadi to frying crisp puris, every dish was touched by the collective joy and effort of our school community.

As the fragrance of jaggery and neem wafted through the hall, we gathered in our festive attire, ready to welcome the New Year with open hearts. The rituals were conducted with reverence, followed by storytelling sessions about the significance of Ugadi and its message of hope, renewal, and balance in life.

More than a festival, Ugadi became a celebration of togetherness. The sight of students from all grades working side by side, regardless of their usual friend groups or roles, reminded us of the beauty of shared responsibility. It was proof that early mornings, hard work, and even a little turmeric on your uniform can lead to something truly joyful.

This Ugadi celebration wasn't just about tradition, it was about creating new memories, strengthening our bonds, and ushering in a new beginning, together.

Flora

Chafa (Michelia champaca), commonly known as the Champak flower, is a fragrant and beautiful bloom native to South Asia. Its vibrant yellow or white petals emit a sweet, intoxicating fragrance, making it highly valued in cultural and religious rituals. The flower is often used in making garlands for offerings, weddings, and temple decorations. In India, Chafa symbolizes purity, beauty, and divine presence, frequently mentioned in ancient texts and folklore. The tree itself is evergreen, and its flowers bloom seasonally, attracting both admiration and reverence. Known for its therapeutic qualities, Chafa is also used in traditional medicine for various ailments.

Fauna

The squirrel is a small, agile rodent belonging to the family Sciuridae, known for its bushy tail and lively personality. Found across the globe, squirrels can be categorized into tree squirrels, ground squirrels, and flying squirrels. Their diet mainly consists of nuts, seeds, fruits, and occasionally insects. Squirrels are excellent climbers and can navigate through trees with incredible speed and precision. They are also known for their habit of storing food, burying nuts to survive harsh winter months. Squirrels play an important ecological role by aiding in seed dispersal, helping to maintain forest and plant biodiversity. Their playful antics make them a favorite among nature watchers.

Medicinal flora

Curry leaves (Murraya koenigii) are aromatic, dark green leaves native to India and widely used in South Asian cuisine. Known for their distinct, pungent flavor, they are a key ingredient in curries, dals, soups, and chutneys. The leaves are often sautéed in hot oil to release their flavor, forming the base of many traditional dishes. Rich in antioxidants, vitamins, and minerals, curry leaves are also valued for their medicinal properties, such as promoting digestion, lowering cholesterol, and supporting hair health. Both fresh and dried curry leaves are used, though fresh leaves offer the most intense flavor and fragrance.
